Introduction

This guide lists microform holdings of historical research materials in the Arts & Social Sciences Library of the University of Bristol, as of May, 2008. Information about the coverage and arrangement of the guide and the entries appears below in the introduction to the 1995 edition.

Introduction to 1995 edition (abridged)

At a time when the catalogues of most academic libraries in this country can be accessed at a terminal with the utmost ease, the production of a finding list of one university library's collection of microforms may be thought unnecessary. D.J. Munro, compiler of the London finding list Microforms for historians, admits that microforms are "unloved as a format and ill-served bibliographically" but "that nonetheless ... they have become a major medium for the 'publication' of historical materials by both institutions and commercial publishers." The Arts & Social Sciences Library at Bristol has been forced, partly by the interests of the departments it serves, partly by the high price of microforms, and partly by the random nature of commercial microform publishing, to purchase selectively. This has continued over some thirty years chiefly for Historical Studies, and the compilation of a general holdings statement now seems in order in the hope of stimulating the use of these generally underused and often expensive investments, and perhaps of avoiding unnecessary duplication among libraries in the area.

Scope

This list is primarily concerned with microform materials, the originals of which are held elsewhere. Materials may be in microform publishers' sets, produced by private repositories or privately filmed.

It includes not only 'collections' or groups of materials and records, sets of printed books, pamphlets or serials, but also single monographs and serial titles here held in fiche or film form, so that the Library's strengths, particularly in early nineteenth-century radical and Chartist newspapers, are revealed.

'Microform' here means reel film, microfiche or microcard. Xerox and other full size photographic reproductions are not included. As in Munro's list, 'historical' has been freely interpreted, and materials have been included with a mind to the needs of politics, economics and social science students as well as historians. Only materials on classics, modern languages and music, together with a few purely scientific items, have been excluded (although bibliographies all on fiche, most of which supplement printed listings, are included). The period range is from the earliest times to about 1980.

Arrangement

Anyone with any knowledge of D.J. Munro's Microforms for historians: a finding list of research collections in London libraries will realize how eagerly I have adopted his arrangement and style.

The materials are listed in an alphabetical sequence of area and general subject headings, the larger of which are subdivided. Within sections the arrangement is generally chronological together with geographical or other convenient grouping. British and Irish history bulks largest, and holdings for other countries are so small as to make division into, say, economic or social history for the respective country redundant and confusing. A certain amount of British history will be found under general subject headings.

Entry

Entries consist of the following elements if available:

- Title
- Imprint (publisher or producer)
- Format (size of set and note of finding aids if any)
- Location (classmark in the Arts & Social Sciences Library)

Note that titles may differ as publisher's presentations vary, and may be different on film label and box or fiche title and envelope. I have attempted to note major variations. Publishers are given in their form at the time of acquisition and no account is taken of later forms of their name; for example, British Museum and British Library can both be found.

Indexes

Title, select name (authors, editors, compilers and subjects of biographies or names mentioned in titles), and subject indexes follow the main sequence.

Bibliographical Note

As Munro says, there is "little adequate bibliographical control of microforms in the United Kingdom". The UK has no published listing of private or institutional holdings akin to the National register of microform masters in the United States. There are trade listings, Guide to microforms in print and Subject guide to microforms in print, but these are of limited use to scholars and not satisfactory for librarians. Microform review carries useful information and reviews but is not held by the Library, and British national bibliographic databases virtually exclude commercially published microforms because of lack of agreement over deposit requirements between copyright libraries and microform publishers. There are a number of individual library and specialist lists.

Individual library and specialist lists

The most significant individual library and specialist lists are:

1. British Library. Microform research collections. At url: <http://www.bl.uk/services/document/microrescoll/microrescoll.html>
2. Microform research collections at the British Library. 1989. Pamphlet Z1033.M5 BRI
